Partnership Type: The two-way partnership is between NCATE and the State Department of Education (DoE) or the State Board of Teaching (BoT); the three way partnership also includes the state’s higher education commission (HEC). In the case of CO, the partnership is only between NCATE and the state higher education commission.

Team Composition: The team may be all NCATE Board of Examiner members and a state “consultant” (from the state agency); a joint team includes both NCATE BOE and trained state reviewers who work together to conduct the review and make decisions; concurrent teams refer to a state team and an NCATE team that work at the same time, (and may share information), but make independent decisions about the standards.

Program Review: The state may delegate the program review to NCATE and use the findings for its state approval process; or, NCATE may defer to the state’s review if the state adopts NCATE program standards or if the state develops program standards that closely align with NCATE program standards and conducts a program review similar to the NCATE program review.

NCATE or National Accreditation Required: While NCATE accreditation is voluntary, some states mandate NCATE or national accreditation of its teacher education institutions.

All Public Institutions NCATE Accredited: Some states mandate NCATE or national accreditation of its public teacher education institutions. In some cases all public institutions are NCATE accredited even if there is no mandate.
